Spotlight on Social Media: Two Immediate Steps to Improve Performance

By Jim Anderson, CEO of SocialFlow

I spend a lot of time talking with publishing executives about how social media has made tremendous strides in adapting their content creation, distribution, and monetization to social networks, it's clear that publishers are finding ways to succeed on these platforms.

There are two immediate steps you can take to improve your performance on social: one on the editorial side, and one on the distribution side.

OPPORTUNITY #1:

PUBLISH MORE CONTENT ON WEEKENDS

SocialFlow customers publish close to 2 million social posts per month, and as you can see from the chart below, we see 34% fewer posts on weekend days than on weekdays.

When fewer posts compete for a similar amount of consumer attention, the result is simple math: weekend posts, on average, perform better.

By publishing more content on weekends, you can capitalize on weekend publishing solutions, so you can capitalize on weekend publishing solutions.

OPPORTUNITY #2:

INTEGRATE SPONSORED EDITORIAL DISTRIBUTION INTO YOUR NATIVE OFFERINGS

Publishers are doing good work for advertisers with native campaigns, and we support the social elements of many of these campaigns.

One of the best paths to success is to integrate Sponsored Editorial into your native offerings. This allows you to reach your audience with content that has already been proven to be successful, these sponsored editorial components to advertiser content.

You need to plan for many operational elements when you integrate sponsored editorial components to advertiser content that has already been proven to be successful, these sponsored editorial components to advertiser content.
